The TripleA-reno Road Show around Europe could not happen this year due to the COVID-19 pandemic. As an alternative, TripleA-reno partners have come up with a HomeShow. From the comfort and safety of their homes, Simona D’Oca (project coordinator) interviewed the project partners in a series of 12 short videos.

The TripleA-reno HomeShow is an opportunity to meet the project’s multidisciplinary team and learn first-hand about the attractive, affordable, and acceptable human-centred solutions that they are developing to support you on the decision-making process during building renovation projects. The human-centred approach was led by the TripleA-reno anthropologist team. They have shown the value of anthropology applied by studying the building renovation project as a social process either to the point of view of the human relationships throughout the project development or as a trigger for residents change into more health and sustainable behaviour. In order to support the behavioural change, TripleA-reno partners created a new combined labelling scheme and a gamified platform. The labelling scheme translates monitoring data from the flats into useful information on energy saving and indoor environment quality for the residents. These evidences support people in their decision making both during the renovation design and/or after the renovation is done. The gamified platform idea is to use “game elements in a non-gaming setting”, as TripleA-reno expert Matthijs Bierman explains in his interview, in order to facilitate the decision-making process during the renovation project. The gamification strategy will be used both ways digitally as a central digital point that connects all parties involved in the renovation process and non-digitally as a board game in order to include people from all backgrounds and skills in the decision-making process. The result will empower people in their building renovation project, creating a decentralised action around Europe in order to achieve the targets proposed by the European Commission in the Green Deal.
What is next?

The next Home Show season will be out soon on the project official channels. The new episodes will focus on the project demonstration buildings all over Europe (Italy, Slovenia, Spain, Greece, Hungary, and the Netherlands). Furthermore, one episode will be dedicated to the combined labelling scheme. The tool will be presented in November during a free webinar addressed to architects and professionals in the construction sector. Stay tuned on the TripleA-reno website and social media, if you would like to attend it!
